freeQ: Inconsistent “question on held back content” message? In the “unrelated” tab, the “question on held back content” message was correct:

But when I clicked “Ask Question”, the “question on held back content” message changed. As it says, the content is unsalvageable. Now what happens when people ask a question where the OP forgot to include all the necessary information to close the question? A: I can definitely see where this is coming from. If your question is completely unanswerable, you should not ask it. If you didn't want to include all that information, you should have mentioned this in your question. A: I think this is the intended behavior. The message is a little misleading, as my first reaction is that the question was salvageable, but you edited it and made it worse. In fact, it's more or less a polite way of saying "your question is a complete mess, we can't answer it". For purposes of detection and/or identification, there are certain physical parameters that can be measured, which provide a basis for distinguishing between similar-looking objects. For example, a fingerprint has unique pattern characteristics that can be measured, and those measurements can be utilized for distinguishing between a fingerprint that is identical to a previously measured fingerprint. Similarly, a bar code symbol can be “scanned” using a suitable scanner, and unique bar code characteristic data can be interpreted to identify the bar code.

The term “biometric information” as used herein refers to the physical characteristics described, including the bar code characteristic data described above, which are measured and analyzed in order to distinguish between two or more individuals.

Biological objects, such as DNA, can also be measured and analyzed, and unique characteristic patterns can be determined for one or more individuals. For example, in a typical DNA analysis process, biological material can be obtained from a person (e.g., blood, hair, saliva, etc.), and then a “DNA profile” can be determined based on the DNA contained in the biological material. The DNA profile can be used to compare the person's DNA against a reference DNA profile, with the goal of ascertaining whether or not the two DNA profiles match. Examples of commercially available
